Practice Overview

Rhys Taylor specialises in money and property disputes following family relationship breakdown.

In the field of financial remedies he has a noted and sought after specialism dealing with pensions on divorce. He is very well versed with cohabitant disputes or disputes involving third party rights in financial remedy cases.

As a "family law" barrister with significant experience of contested civil trials, he is well placed to assist family lawyers with substantive and procedural advice in either fighting or resolving disputes arising under the Trusts of Land and Appointment of Trustees Act 1996.

Rhys is both an IFLA appointed arbitrator and civil mediator. He also offers Early Neutral Evaluation (private FDRs) for both TOLATA and financial remedy disputes.

He was voted "Family Law Commentator of the Year" in the 2015 Jordans' Family Law Awards.

He is a co-author of the third edition of "Pensions on Divorce: A Practitioner's Handbook" (LexisNexis/Jordans) and a member of the Pension Advisory Group.

Rhys lectures on his areas of interest, including at the Judicial College on the subject of pensions on divorce.

Notable and Reported cases

- Dobson v Griffey [2018] EWHC 1117 (Ch)

Judgment involving a careful application of constructive trust and proprietary estoppel doctrines which determines that a cohabitant had no equitable interest in a farm property in which she had lived and in respect of which she had made contributions.

Cohabitee & Matrimonial Finance

Rhys has extensive experience in all aspects of matrimonial finance and family property disputes. In the field of financial remedy work Rhys deals with complex assets, often held by third parties, discretionary family trusts or companies. Rhys has a particular interest in disputes concerning the beneficial ownership of farms and estates in the family property context.

Family Dispute Resolution

Rhys is an arbitrator, appointed under the Institute for Family Arbitrator's scheme and also a collaborative lawyer. Rhys is also able to provide Early Neutral Evaluation in TOLATA cases
